WHAT IS QualityPro

AND WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO YOU?

What Is QualityPro?

QualityPro is the pest management industry's leading credentialing program. This program is designed to increase professionalism of the industry; stimulate consumer demand through increased confidence and a higher public perception of industry professionalism; create common-sense, quality industry standards; and provide marketing opportunities to participating companies by recognizing commitment to excellence and higher performance standards. This is a company, not an individual, designation.

QualityPro is designed to differentiate accredited companies from the competition and to increase the overall professionalism of the industry. As a QualityPro accredited company, when you inform consumers about the program through the marketing tools provided, you can increase your business. In addition, this program encourages QualityPro companies to hire smartly, train correctly, and upgrade professionalism through the training and education of service technicians and sales personnel.

QualityPro companies follow environmental stewardship standards and are committed to providing consumers with effective yet eco-friendly service. Built around the four key principles of Business Operations, Consumer Relations, Environmental Stewardship, and Technician Testing, the QualityPro accreditation is designed to be attainable and affordable for every company in the pest management industry.

The program was developed and is currently managed by representatives from companies of all sizes from around the country, assuring you of the highest quality program.

Why Do You Need QualityPro?

The pest management industry needs to raise the bar for quality. Consumers are unsure how to choose a pest management professional. QualityPro makes it easier to select companies by more clearly identifying pest management companies that excel.

As a result of pressures on the industry to stimulate growth in the marketplace, a broad range of industry stakeholders called upon NPMA to organize a program designed to recognize professionalism in the industry. The group asked NPMA to develop a comprehensive certification for companies in the pest management industry.

NPMA set out to determine the best industry practices and create a program that would make a difference to consumers, regulators, and the media. Research included discussions with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, state pesticide officials, and national media. NPMA also conducted focus groups to discover how consumers would view this program.

Research findings were overwhelmingly positive. Most importantly, in the focus groups consumers replied positively to this type of program. When asked to comment on the statement, "Imagine if this national organization that we've been talking about would offer a certification program," participants stated:

- "That would tell me the company knows what it is doing."
- "It means the company is more qualified and had to meet additional requirements."
- "The company cares enough about doing a good job that they will go the extra mile."

The research results provided a validation of the opportunity to influence the attitudes of consumers, the media, and regulators with regard to the pest management industry.

How Will it Work?

QUALITYPRO ACCREDITATION AT-A-GLANCE

How Do You Become QualityPro?

A wide range of materials will be available for companies that are interested in becoming QualityPro accredited. The program's unique structure is designed to be inclusive, offering opportunities for direct industry involvement from small companies to large corporations.

QualityPro was not designed to impose a set of standards, but rather to raise the bar by providing every company with the tools needed to meet the minimum standards for excellence in the industry. Once you apply, you will receive access to www.qualityprototools.org. Look for the toolbox symbol throughout this book, which indicates the material included in the QualityPro Toolbox. The value of these tools alone justifies your cost.

STANDARD 1:4 - BUSINESS OPERATIONS

QualityPro Hiring Practices

Criminal Background Check Requirements

A QualityPro Employer must, at a minimum, adhere to the following with regard to all current employees and all prospective employees who have been offered a position.

1. Unless prohibited by a state or local law or regulation, QualityPro Employers must obtain criminal background reports from a Fair Credit reporting Act (FCRA) compliant company for all current employees and prospective employees who have been offered a position.
3. A company is not eligible to be QualityPro accredited until all criminal background checks for current employees have been completed unless a law is in place that prohibits background checks. (Note: QualityPro does not recommend asking about criminal history on the employment application and/or during the pre-hire period. Contact the NPMA HR Consultant or a qualified professional for guidance applicable to your location and company.)
4. If background checks have been conducted on current employees within one year prior to the point that the employer begins the QualityPro application process, it is not necessary to obtain additional checks if: (a) the background checks that were obtained within the past one-year period meet all of the provisions noted below, and (b) the current employees who qualify for this exception sign an affidavit attesting that they have not been convicted of a crime in the past one year. The affidavit may be worded in a way that complies with any special state regulations. If a current employee reports that he or she has been convicted of a crime within the past one-year period, the QualityPro Employer must obtain a current background check to verify the information provided by the employee and to determine if the employee remains qualified and/or is suitable for continued employment. (Note: With approval from QualityPro, employers may be allowed to substitute (a) and (b) for a review process that is defined, enforced, and conducted by state Structural Pest Control Boards.
5. Individuals for whom background reports have been ordered may begin working before the company receives criminal background results for that individual; however, he/she may not visit or work at or on a customer's property unless accompanied by another employee whose background checks have been completed.
6. To comply with QualityPro background check provisions, QualityPro Employers must order the following records:
 - a. A Social Security Number report that provides the current and previous addresses for the candidate. Using results from the social security number report along with the completed employment application form and (if available) the resume, QualityPro Employers must verify the whereabouts of the candidate for the past seven years (or, for candidates who have been in the workforce for less than seven years, the timeframe covered by the complete employment history);
 - b. A national database criminal history report that includes results from a broad range of available criminal databases nationwide. If the national database criminal history report reveals a conviction, the QualityPro Employer must obtain the actual criminal record report from the county source (or, if a county record is not available, from the state source) and the report must verify the disposition and other details of the conviction. (Note: Criminal record reports from national database scans should not typically be used to make employment decisions. Actual criminal conviction reports must be obtained from the arresting agency (typically the county)); and
 - c. Available criminal background reports from all counties (or states or metro-counties) where the individual has resided for at least the past seven years, or within the timeframe required by any applicable state or federal regulation. (Note: A "metro-county" includes the county where the individual lived and all surrounding counties.) If, during this timeframe, a candidate has resided outside of the United States, the QualityPro Employer must obtain any available international criminal background reports.

7. If the results of a criminal background check reveal a conviction or other criminal history, QualityPro Employers have the discretion to make their own employment decisions based on the results. When making an employment decision based on the results from a criminal background check, QualityPro Employers must: (1) abide by current federal, state, and local laws and regulations pertaining to employer use of criminal records/history, (2) if applicable, comply with FCRA requirements pertaining to use of consumer reports, (3) follow relevant company policies and practices pertaining to use of criminal records and (if relevant) falsification of a company document, and (4) consult with a qualified professional when necessary.

The following factors can be used to determine if an employment decision based on the results of a criminal background check is justified by business necessity:

- a. The nature and gravity of the offense(s) (Some examples of offenses that may be considered grave include, but are not limited to, offenses involving threats or acts of violence and/or weapons, harassment, stalking, property damage, assault, theft, fraud, fiscal dishonesty, burglary, sexual battery/rape, sexual offenses, crimes involving minors, crimes involving the elderly or other vulnerable people, and drug or alcohol-related offenses);
- b. The time that has passed since the conviction and/or completion of the sentence; and
- c. The nature of the job held or sought (For example, a QualityPro Employer could consider the following questions: Does the position involve driving a vehicle? Will or does the individual perform services on or inside customer property? Will or does the individual have access to confidential or sensitive customer information such as credit card numbers, security codes for customer properties, or keys for customer properties? Does the position involve the use of safety-sensitive equipment or products? For these and other questions, how does the criminal offense or offenses pertain to the job?)

When a criminal background report divulges an arrest record(s), QualityPro Employers should consult with a qualified professional to determine the extent (if any) to which the surrounding circumstances of the arrest and/or the conduct of the individual pertaining to the arrest(s) may be considered when making an employment decision.

8. All attempts to order criminal background records must be documented.
9. QualityPro Employers must comply with all provisions of the FCRA (and/or any applicable city, county or state ordinances, laws, statutes, or regulations) that pertain to obtaining and utilizing criminal records including, but not limited to, employee notification requirements such as pre-adverse and adverse action notices used to communicate an employment decision that is based on results from a criminal background report.
10. QualityPro Employers must adopt, implement, and enforce a written policy that requires all employees to report any convictions that occur while employed by the QualityPro Employer.

A model Charges and Convictions policy is available at qualityprotocols.org.

9. QUALITYPRO GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES

9.1 Objective. In order for the QualityPro program to raise the performance and customer service benchmarks for the industry, grievance procedures for the QualityPro program are vital. Grievance procedures will ensure that any complaint about a QualityPro company or a QualityPro candidate will be thoroughly investigated and resolved.

9.2 Scope. The Grievance Procedures apply only to investigations of complaints about QualityPro or QualityPro candidates and the scope of the investigation may only involve a complaint that the company is not in compliance with qualifications set forth by the QualityPro board. The QualityPro board may not investigate complaints against QualityPro companies, QualityPro candidates, or regular members beyond this scope. QualityPro candidates shall be defined as companies that have sent in their affidavits of compliance but have not yet been approved.

9.3 Composition. The Grievance Committee shall be composed of five individuals, one attorney, one human resources expert, one regulator, and two QP Board members, appointed annually at the first meeting of the QualityPro Board in each NPMA fiscal year. If any members of the Grievance Committee are in direct competition with a company being investigated or there is any conflict of interest, the members shall recuse themselves and the chair of the QualityPro board will appoint a replacement for that complaint only.

9.4 Complaint Origination. There are no restrictions as to origin of complaint. Complaints may originate from customers, companies, regulators, or other sources. In order to guarantee that all information is received in a similar manner, complainant must complete a complaint form, which may be hard copy and/or posted online at the pleasure of the QualityPro Board. The complaint form is used to make sure that all facts are presented fairly and in the words of the complainant. All complaints must be sent to NPMA directly.

9.5 Workflow. Upon receipt of a complaint, staff will review it to ensure that it is within the scope of QualityPro and criteria set forth above. For example, if the complaint is regarding something not QualityPro related, staff will notify complainant that it is not a QualityPro issue and will forward the complaint to the company explaining that it is not within the scope of QP but as a member service, we send complaints for resolution by the company.

After being determined that a complaint is within the scope of QualityPro, staff will remove the name and send a copy to the company via certified mail with a response form. The response form is due back to NPMA by certified mail within ten days after receipt by the company. After investigation by staff, one copy of the complaint and one of the responses will be sent to each member of the Grievance Committee. Non-response by the company shall not stop the process and will be viewed as a company response of no-contest. Staff shall note this in the transmittal packet. The chair will convene a conference call to be held within thirty days of distribution of the complaint. A majority of the Grievance committee must be on the call (three members) as shall the QualityPro attorney. At least one staff member must also be on the call. One staff member shall be responsible for recording notes.

All complaints shall have one of three resolutions based upon action of the majority of the Grievance Committee:

1. No action.
2. Company is to be given a certain length of time to correct out of tolerance conditions. In the case of candidates (or currently called applicants), approval is suspended until corrections are made.
3. Membership in QualityPro is revoked. This option shall be in cases only where the person signing the affidavit knowingly violated the Qualifications of QualityPro and has not made corrections. A company whose membership is revoked may reapply after one year. If a company's membership in QualityPro is revoked, that company may not use the logo in any new advertising and may not present themselves as a QualityPro company.

Grievance Committee shall notify the company of disposition of the complaint and necessary action within ten days after the conference call via certified mail. It shall be incumbent upon the company to provide proof of corrective action to the satisfaction of the Grievance Committee by signed affidavit. Grievance Committee reserves the right to ask for further proof or documentation. Grievance committee can reinstate or confirm compliance if necessary. Complainant shall also receive a copy of the disposition.

9.6 Confidentiality. All activities by the Grievance Committee shall be held confidential. If suspended the company shall be described as Inactive QualityPro, which is the same category as a company that does not renew their designation.

9.7 Appeals. If a company wishes to appeal, they may send a certified letter outlining their case within thirty days of receiving the Grievance Committee notification of disposition. Appeals will be heard by the entire QualityPro Board via conference call to be set not less than thirty days after notification by company. Dispositions of the Board are final and the Board's decision will be to solely uphold the Grievance Committee or reject the Grievance Committee decision. Company must provide justification for appeal to the Board. All action will require a quorum of the Board and a majority of members voting.
